Historical Prison and Community Corrections Populations

Prison: Inmates are supervised by the Department of Corrections and are housed in institutions across the state. The official definition of prison population has changed slightly over the time period covered by this report.

The reporting methodology changed for community population counts in July 1997. The new methodology allows for a four month lag in data entry. Before July 1997 a snapshot of the population was taken one minute after midnight on the first day of the month. The new methodology allows additional time for data entry and results in more accurate offender counts. Also, the criteria for being included in the community population counts has changed several times during the period covered by this report.

Local Control: This population began on January 1, 1997 with the implementation of Senate Bill 1145. This law places offenders with incarceration sentences of 12 months or fewer under local jurisdiction. Locally appointed supervisory authorities move offenders serving a local control sentence among incarceration and community sanction alternatives.

Parole/Post-Prison Supervision: A period of community supervision following an incarceration sentence. Parole and Post-Prison Supervision are two different legal terms for the same type of supervision. They are served by an offender after prison or local control and are supervised by community corrections offices.

Probation: Offenders with only probation sentences are supervised by community corrections offices. Misdemeanant probation offenders are included in the population count only if the misdemeanor offense was funded by the state for supervision. State funding for misdemeanant supervision was dropped completely July 1, 1997 and those cases are no longer reflected in the probation population counts.
