

Landowner Directory of Contractors Coos and Curry County 2008

Coos Soil and Water Conservation District and Curry County Soil and Water Conservation District

Why a Coos/Curry Landowner Directory of Contractors?

Recently, the Coos and Curry Soil and Water Conservation Districts collaborated with the Oregon Department of Forestry and several other agencies to produce and distribute the South Coast Landowner Resource Guide, a publication which provides basic forest and agricultural land management information as well as helpful contact information of agencies and organizations that assist landowners to accomplish their stewardship goals. During that process, it was determined that it would be helpful to compile a list of contractors in the region who specialize in land management services. This directory is the result of a collaborative effort between the Coos and Curry Soil & Water Conservation Districts with the help of funding from the Oregon Department of Forestry and the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Information in this directory comes from a combination of agency lists and voluntary submission of information from contractors. With only a few exceptions all contractors were contacted directly to obtain current information. This directory is not intended to be an exhaustive list of land management contractors but rather a starting point. For the convenience of the user, blank areas are provided in the back to allow for additional contractor listings. Other sources for finding contractors include phone books, classified ads, the Internet, agricultural/forestry newsletters and publications, neighbors, and agencies such as OSU Extension or the Oregon Small Woodland Association.

This information is provided with the intent of stimulating activity in land management. No endorsement or recommendation is implied in providing this information. The Coos and Curry Soil & Water Conservation Districts and partners associated with the publication of this document do not guarantee or warranty the contractors listed, nor the authenticity of any statements provided by private parties for this publication. Reference to the listed contractors does not signify our approval to the exclusion of other contractors.

Additional copies of this directory are available free at the Oregon Department of Forestry and the Curry Soil & Water Conservation District. An electronic version is also available at egov.oregon.gov/ODF/PRIVATE_FORESTS/private_forests.shtml or www.currywatersheds.org. If you have any questions or suggestions concerning this directory please contact the Curry Soil & Water Conservation District at (541) 247-2755 ext 0#.

Choosing a Contractor or Consultant

Before you set someone loose on your property, it's wise to do some homework to verify if the contractor has "the right stuff" for the work you want to do.

The right credentials

Some types of work or businesses may require a specific license. Check with the Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries: (941) 673-0761 or go to www.boli.state.or.us and click on "Farm/Forest Labor." Verify that the contractor is insured and bonded to protect their worker(s), you and your property

The right experience

Make sure the contractor has experience doing the work you need to have done. For example, a tree planter may not be equipped to remove a hazardous tree nest to your house. Ask for names of former clients and request permission to view completed projects. See if the contractor holds membership in a professional association or has affiliation with a professional group. This can help you determine if a contractor is right for the job you have in mind.

The right equipment

Don't assume all contractors are equally prepared to handle the challenges particular to your property. Make sure the contractor has access to the appropriate equipment needed for your job and that it is cleaned thoroughly between jobs to avoid spreading noxious weed seeds and/or diseases such as Port Orford cedar root rot.

The right management methods for the job site

Talk with prospective contractors about how they plan to avoid damaging the land adjacent to your work site. If the job requires transiting through pastures or sensitive riparian areas, is their equipment likely to compact soils? Are they prepared to handle dust control or to repair farm or woodland roads used for access? Is re-seeding of pasture or applying other erosion control an appropriate part of job site cleanup?

Once you've verified the contractor's qualifications the next step is to get an agreement in writing. It's very important that a written contract be carefully drafted and clearly written. OSU Extension's Woodland Workbook provides helpful information about what to consider when drawing up a contract. Call your local extension office for assistance or go to <http://extension.oregonstate.edu/catalog/> and type in "Contracts for Woodland Owners and Christmas Tree Growers" in the search box.

Finally, be aware that certain types of projects require permits (i.e., forestry, work in wetlands and flood plains, construction). In some cases the permitting process can take considerable time to work through, so plan ahead.
