

The Lattice Factory focuses on providing employment opportunities for up to 15 young men at MacLaren Youth Correctional Facility.

Employees gain skills in factory production and learn to plan and construct other wood products. The youth offenders earn money to pay court-ordered restitution, child support, college tuition, or save for independent living expenses.

Prior to coming to work for the Lattice Factory, prospective employees are required to meet several expectations which include earning a high school diploma, working successfully in another MacLaren work program, earning and maintaining top privilege levels in the respective living units, completing required treatment programs, and having a willingness to learn new skills.

The philosophy of the Lattice program is to integrate learning life and job skills that go beyond production and work products. Expectations include reliability, punctuality, following directions, demonstrating initiative, working and respecting others, and excellence of workmanship.
