OPINION

Lisa R. Anderson completed a degree program in which the student took responsibility for the design and implementation of the program. The content and quality of the program are more dependent upon the individual student's efforts than those of the program. National standards and Oregon standards require the graduate program to be responsible for training the student. The law specifically directs the Board to consider national standards when adopting its own. National standards do not recognize external degree programs. The Applicant worked while completing the degree. The Board allows client contact hours from the practicum to apply to the total work experience hours needed for licensure. Ms. Anderson documented hours when she was working, but the dates do not coincide with the courses identified as "practicum" on the transcript.
