Ideas for collaboration beyond the Data Sharing Agreement

- Data sharing: local WIC to local Head Start
  - Sharing data for children enrolled after the beginning of the school year.
  - Working with the WIC RD or Coordinator to receive additional information about children identified as high risk and to develop a shared care plan.

- Communication – relationship between programs
  - Communicate new health and program initiatives and find ways to promote consistent nutrition and health messages.

- Ask the WIC coordinator or Registered Dietitian to be on the Head Start Advisory Committee
  - Talking to people is the best way to build relationships. This will give you an opportunity to talk about what’s going on in your program and find opportunities for working together.

- Ask the WIC program staff to attend Head Start conferences and/or trainings
  - Talking to people is the best way to build relationships. This will give you an opportunity to talk about what’s going on in your program and find opportunities for working together.
Ideas for Collaboration beyond the Data Sharing Agreement cont.....

- Work with your local WIC coordinator to develop nutrition education classes that may be used as the WIC second nutrition education

  - Schedule parent education well in advance so the class can be included in the schedule classes offered WIC-Head Start parents at their WIC appointment.

- Encourage families to participate on the WIC program and come to their WIC appointments.

  - Approximately 40% of WIC appointments are missed. Increasing the show rate for WIC=Head Start families would be a great contribution to the partnership. Encourage WIC eligible families who are not on the program to apply.

- Invite the WIC program to do a satellite clinic at your Head Start center.

  - Families with children between the ages of 3-5 are the most likely to drop off of the WIC program. The most common reason is difficulty making it to appointments. A scheduled WIC clinic at the Head Start at a time parents are already planning to be there would ease the burden and make it easier to continue WIC participation.