

Where Your Liquor Dollars Go

The Oregon Liquor Control Commission (OLCC) contributed more than $350 million to Oregon programs, cities and counties in the 2009-11 biennium. Of that, more than $198 million went to the General Fund to help pay for programs such as schools, police and public health programs.

OLCC revenue is distributed to the General Fund and to other Oregon programs based on a plan created by the state Legislature. OLCC, liquor store agents, alcohol manufacturers and distributors all play a role in creating the revenue.

Mental health, alcohol and drug treatment services benefit from $16.3 million, which helps to pay for addiction programs across the state. The Oregon Wine Board received more than $535,000.

OLCC gave more than $61.3 million to Oregon cities and $30.7 million to counties. Local programs that benefit from OLCC revenues include enforcement, alcohol prevention and treatment as well as other public safety initiatives.

Incorporated cities also benefited from OLCC dollars through city revenue sharing, receiving more than $42.9 million in 2009-11.
