This map is from 1846. Later the same year, the U.S. and Britain decided to split the land known as the Oregon territory at the line between modern Canada and the state of Washington. The modern outline of the state of Oregon has been added in black on top of the original map to make it easier to find, but the state did not take this shape until it attained statehood in 1859.