Removing yellowtuft Alyssum to restore native plant communities

Eradication efforts are underway to restore and protect agricultural lands and native landscapes.

Restored site
Yellowtuft Alyssum threatens to overtake the Illinois Valley’s unique native plant communities, including plants found nowhere else in the world. Yellowtuft Alyssum accumulates heavy metals and may be harmful to livestock and wildlife. Alyssum can spread quickly to surrounding areas.

Oregon has one of the only known locations in North America.
