Contact: OregonCleanFuels@deq.oregon.gov

DEQ staff are pleased to issue this quarterly data summary for the Clean Fuels Program. The aggregated quarterly data for the program is also posted on our website in an Excel spreadsheet.

Credits and Deficits

*Note: DEQ calculates the number of base and incremental residential EV credits on a semi-annual basis and distributes them among electric utilities that have opted into the program as well as for the Backstop Aggregator. When credits are calculated, they are divided between the previous two quarters and retroactively reported in the Second and Fourth Quarter Data Summaries. DEQ did not receive all of the documentation needed to calculate the incremental credits for the second half of 2022 and anticipates that additional residential incremental credits for 2022 will be issued shortly. The updated credit volume for Q4 2022 will be included in the Q1 2023 data summary.

Credits generated by fuel type
