

- Human Remains and Funerary Objects – Any human remains of Native American origin (e.g., skeletal elements, teeth, tissue, or hair), any object or artifact generally associated with death or a related ritual, whether directly recovered from a human burial, associated with a burial, or an object that by its nature or condition indicates a relationship to Native American burial or funerary practices.
- Archaeological - Any object, material, or artifact (collected scientifically or otherwise) regardless of whether or not it is from a site that has been officially recorded, or any collection(s) of artifacts/objects that can be identified as originating from such a site or documented tribal territory resulting from Native American occupation or use.
- Historic - Objects, archival materials (e.g., photographs, written and audio materials such as diaries, journals, maps, field notes, newspapers, interviews, recordings of native languages songs, etc.), or agency records (e.g., permits, authorizations, passes, reports, etc.) associated with person(s) or places significant to Oregon's tribes' historic experience and/or contemporary identity.
