10. How does the United Nations define genocide (Article 2 of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948))?

11. During the Termination Era, Congress passed dozens of acts terminating the existence of specific tribal governments and reservations. In total, 109 Native American governments were terminated, affecting 1,362,155 acres of land and 11,466 Native American people. Under these acts, Native American lands were sold, state legislative and taxation authority imposed, federal programs discontinued and tribes' sovereign authority ended. The federal government pursued a policy of relocating Native Americans to urban areas under the assumption that training and employment opportunities there would improve their economic situation. Most people participating returned home in the 60s and 70s.

How would you talk about the consequences of Termination and Restoration with students?

12. What are the key concepts you would use to describe the importance of treaties to your students?
