

NW Cornelius Pass Road Jurisdictional Transfer

NW Cornelius Pass Road will be transferred from Multnomah County and Washington County to ODOT

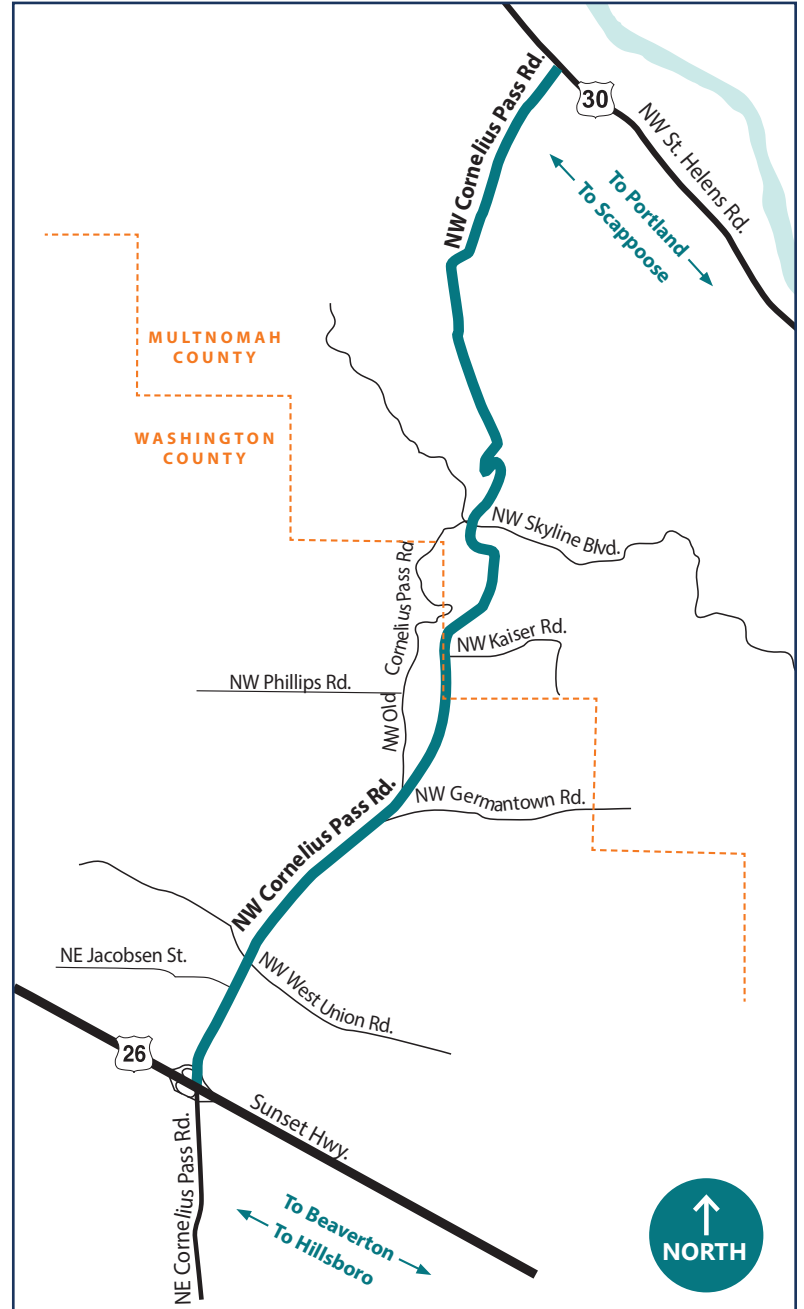

The Oregon Department of Transportation is preparing to assume ownership of NW Cornelius Pass Road between U.S. 30 and U.S. 26 through a process called a jurisdictional transfer. Multnomah County and Washington County currently manage this road. The transfer of this road was directed by the State Legislature in 2017. Once the road is transferred it will be part of our state highway system.

Changes for residents and travelers following the jurisdictional transfer

There are only a few noticeable changes for people who live and travel on NW Cornelius Pass Road every day. As a state highway, the road will be subject to ODOT standards for design and maintenance and any improvements to the road will be planned and funded at the statewide level, which you can read more about on the next page.

ODOT is collaborating with Multnomah County and Washington County to complete the jurisdictional transfer.

County ownership

ODOT ownership

Multnomah and Washington Counties are responsible for road maintenance such as pavement repair, protective sealing and lane striping.

ODOT is responsible for maintaining roadway paving and protective sealing, striping, bridges, illumination, signs, signals and all other roadway features.

Multnomah and Washington County Public Works respond to crashes and other incidents on the road.

ODOT responds to crashes and other incidents on the road. Law enforcement response remains the same.

Multnomah and Washington Counties are responsible for maintaining the road during winter weather. Both counties currently classify the road as a primary route for winter weather operations.

ODOT is responsible for maintaining the road during winter weather. ODOT provides winter weather service on NW Cornelius Pass Road at Level of Service B, meaning ODOT plows the road after completing plowing on primary highways such as I-5 and U.S. 26.
