

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Jeff Marotta, Ph.D. is the President and Senior Consultant with Problem Gambling Solutions, Inc., a company specializing in research, evaluation, and development of problem gambling services and responsible gambling practice and policy. Jeff has a doctorate in Clinical Psychology from the University of Nevada, Reno and a background in academics and government. He serves on the board of directors for three non-profits while living in Portland Oregon with his wife and two teenaged children.

Tyree Dingle, M.S. is a PhD graduate student studying clinical psychology at Pacific University. He is interested in clinical research focused on the treatment of addictive behaviors and the co-occurring emotional distress that accompanies these – particularly among young adults and adolescents. He currently lives in Portland Oregon where he enjoys reading fantasy novels, writing, and leisurely spending his time.

Makenzie Irrgang, M. S. is a PhD graduate student studying clinical psychology at Pacific University. She is interested in addictive behaviors and the experience of trauma and stressful life events, and how these factors co-occur and impact social, emotional, behavioral, occupational, and physical well-being. She grew up in Maryland and currently lives in Portland, Oregon. She considers herself a foodie and enjoys exploring the PNW with her dog, Sophie.

Paige Reohr, M.S. is a PhD student studying clinical psychology at Pacific University and part of Pacific's Sabiduría Latinx Psychology emphasis. She is passionate about community wellness, cultural psychology, and health disparities among the aging population. Outside of school, Paige spends time hiking, writing, and spending time with family.
