

HOOD RIVER DISTILLERS

Hood River Distillers is the largest and oldest importer, producer, bottler and marketer of spirits in the northwest.

Located along the Columbia River with majestic Mt. Hood as its backdrop, Hood River Distillers has been at its current production facility in Hood River since 1934. The company began by making fruit wines and brandies from the apples, pears and berries that were going to waste as excess production from the valley's abundant harvests.

While many things have changed, the tradition and dedication to the quality and to building long-term relationships has not. Hood River Distillers uses "The Code of the West" as its model for doing business. These ten principles play an integral part in the overall success of the company and its employees.

Although its core distribution began in the Pacific Northwest, Hood River Distillers is currently producing more than 1.25 million cases per year, and distributing its products nationwide. Hood River Distillers is a member of the Century Council and promotes responsible drinking habits.
