Equipment

Depending on the model, CapTel provides access to the Captioned Telephone Service or Internet Protocol Captioned Telephone Service for individuals whose hearing loss requires captions to communicate over the phone. The individual speaks to the other person, listens and reads the captions on the screen. A live operator may be used to generate the captions of what the other person on the call says.

Recipients of the internet based CapTel models may be required to register to use Internet Protocol Captioned Telephone Service, which is funded through a federal program.

In many cases, an amplified phone meets the individual's needs.
